DEDICATION

In keeping with yearbook tradition, the Apothekan staff has decided that our book would reflect the attitudes and experiences of the Class of 1973 and be dedicated to that one person who has helped us through our difficult years, and inspired us to higher levels of professional practice. Unfortunately, we could find no such person among the staff or administration of CUCPS. We have therefore agreed to dedicate this yearbook to the Class of 1973.

We have withstood all the inherent unfairness and absurdities of poor curriculum planning, shabby educational facilities, broken promises of new facilities, impending school closure, and most importantly, the failure of our school to give us a sense of professional pride. We do not intend to imply that our education has been of poor quality, but that it has been poorly directed in producing a professional pharmacist. We feel that if pharmacy is to survive and grow, then professionalism must be taught to its students. Professionalism must be introduced early in the curriculum and become an integral part of school learning.

Our class has met the present demands of a pharmaceutical education and we congratulate ourselves for doing so. We would like to thank those who have contributed to our knowledge and those who have helped make this book meaningful. To those who may find parts of this book objectionable and in bad taste, we apologize and remind them that they could have had a voice in what was said, but chose not to.

The Class of 1973 has had good times and bad times — the yearbook staff hopes that the following pages will provide memories to reflect upon in the future.

C.P.S. Struggling for Life

There is no fitting prologue which can be written for this section; the afterward is even now being composed, the material of its contents as uncertain now as it was when it was begun in mid-November of 1971. There is no written commentary which can be fittingly made to those who experienced the subject matter of this section.

Let us not forget this darkest portion of our education. Let us, throughout our lives, be wary of the sick emotional madnesses which thrust our academic institution into a mangled labyrinth from which it may never emerge.

Dean's Talk Spurs Rebellion in Faculty & Students

To the Dean's apparent surprise the students had spoken up for a change. He told the ANODYNE that, "it was refreshing to hear the students speak up."

When questioned about the financial records of the school he replied, "They're not in as good a shape as we would've liked them to be."

Mr. Lerner said that it was "not a question of morals, but a matter of practicality and reality" when asked whether it was morally right for the school to close with three months' notice.

94 School's Fate • Will Be Tried

94
The future of Columbia University's College of Pharmaceutical Studies will be decided in the courts. State Supreme Court Justice Arnold L. Fein yesterday ordered an early trial to determine whether the university "misled" students into believing the pharmacy school is an "integral" part of the university.

Plaing financial problems, the university had announced it would close the pharmacy school at the end of the academic year, and was promptly challenged in a suit by students.

The university contends that it lacks the authority and does not have the responsibility to maintain the school, which is a separate corporation with its own board of trustees.

The students are seeking to keep the school operating at least until they graduate.

Pharmacy School May Affiliate With Division of CUNY

Threat to Accreditation Prompts Proposal

By RICHARD SLOVAK

A proposal to merge the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences and Lehman College of the City University of New York (CUNY) has been presented to the Regents Regional Coordinating Council, the master planners for higher education in the metropolitan area, according to Deputy Vice President for Academic Affairs James S. Young.

Mr. Young said that deans of both schools are discussing the matter, and he added, "We have no objection to the working out of an affiliation with another institution."

One of the reasons for affiliating the pharmacy school with CUNY is that the American Council of Pharmaceutical Education may withdraw the pharmacy school's accreditation, according to Associate Professor of Pharmaceutics Morton Rosoff.

The educational council decided in January to place the pharmacy school on probation this fall since "our facilities were not up to standard," Professor Rosoff said last night. These facilities include "the building and space and labs," he added.

CUNY is seeking to "expand its health science commitment to the city," and affiliation with the pharmacy school would be one way of accomplishing this goal, according to Professor Rosoff.

Professor Rosoff termed the proposal before the Regents Council, which will meet in April, "better than any other affiliation proposal." He added that if the recommendation is accepted it will mean that "one of the bigger hurdles has been overcome" on the way toward affiliation with CUNY.

Friday, February 4

The faculty held their press conference with representatives from the New York Times, the New York Post, AP, WOR, and the Columbia Newsletter. They read their statement and answered questions. The fourth year class also released a statement through Kathy Murray, stressing that they didn't want to blame anyone, they just want to save a worthy school.

To add to the strain another problem arose when the Times reporter twisted one of the statements made by Kathy Murray at the press conference.

The Times reporter blamed the financial crisis on the presence of minority enrollment when in fact, their grants from outside sources pump money into the school. The Times apologized to Miss Murray and promised to print a retraction of said statement.

Mr. Koneriter said that the accounting firm was aware of the school's financial plight as early as April 1971, but refused to divulge the information and violate the confidence of its client.

"We are not antagonistic to anybody," he declared, "we just want the college to survive."

Hey, people, did you hear the one about the member of the Board of Trustees claiming that the "school's books are in a mess"?

"The spending of money is a matter of interpretation. Money has not always been put to the best use."

Students Roar, "Save Our School"

This past Friday, March 3, was a momentous one for CPS students. It seems March came in like a lion, and with a roar of "Save our school" the students at CPS shed their apathy. Partly spurred on by the telecast on WNEW-TV the previous evening, the students wielded their signs and marched a picket line in front of the school from 9:00 A.M. till about 1:00 P.M. Their spirit undaunted by the pouring rain, the students chanted louder and louder "Save our School" and occasionally "Joe must go." The number of students varied between 100 and 200, Dr. Rosoff estimated 60% of the student body marched and 12 out of 16 full-time faculty marched.

Sal Giorgianni, a fourth year student who was interviewed on the news Thursday night, felt the telecast and demonstration would reach the drug companies, and the more publicity we get the better. Howard Nadel, the Student Council president, was observed marching the picket line for a short time and remarked that there was nothing wrong with the demonstration and he didn't think it would make Columbia back away from us. The students were supplied with plenty of hot coffee and sandwiches compliments of Alex from our cafeteria.

Some of the signs that the students carried named specific drug companies for not helping us: Endo, Squibb, and Lilly among them. Other signs named President McGill of Columbia for his lack of support, and Mayor Lindsay was implicated also, "Lindsay—Why Yankee Stadium? Why Not CPS?" A foreign student carried the following sign, "I came 2,000 miles; Where's my future?"

For a short time Mr. Borg, the school business manager, was marching the line next to Dr. Weiner. When asked if he supported the demonstration he replied, 1) "I'm walking my dog." 2) "I'm keeping Dr. Weiner company." 3) "I'm pulling students out of line who didn't pay their tuition."

The demonstration was completely legal and peaceful. Three policemen watched over the proceedings. At 11:30, ABC news and cameramen arrived. After getting pictures of the demonstration, they interviewed Assemblyman Brian Sharoff (Dem-Brooklyn) who is trying to help save the school. He was made aware of the situation by students of our school.

Memorandum: To All Students, Faculty and Staff

From: Associate Dean Stephen M. Gross
Subject: Letter-writing Campaign

On January 12, 1972 Dean Kanig will appear before the New York City Board of Estimate. The College requested this meeting in an effort to secure emergency funds to avert the present financial crisis, and to open the door for continued negotiations with City University.

MARCH 23, 1972

We, the faculty and students of the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences in the City of New York, Columbia University, do hereby express our total lack of confidence in the ability of the present Dean to continue as chief academic officer of the college.

We feel that the Dean is not capable of extricating the school from the deteriorated financial state over which he has presided.

This lack of confidence is based on administrative mismanagement as well as acts of ill judgment and injustice in academic matters. We cite: 1) The Absence of coherent financial records up to 1969. 2) The sudden discovery of a shortage of funds estimated at between $300,000 and $500,000. 3) The threatened discontinuance of financial support by government agencies unless the college supplies adequate accounting of the expenditures of funds. 4) Contempt of academic rights of faculty and students as defined by an AAUP investigational report (December 1971). 5) Refusal to allow faculty and student voice in negotiations related to the survival of this college. 6) Gross disregard of the vested interests of students in the orderly completion of their studies and obtaining their degrees.

Because of this overwhelming lack of confidence we demand that the Board of Trustees of this college immediately remove Dean Kanig from his post.

Since the President of Columbia University is vested according to the agreement between the two institutions with "general supervision and direction of the educational administration of this college as in any other school of the University," we, the faculty and students, recommend that the Board of Trustees request President McGill to appoint an interim administrator to supervise the continued operations of this college.

Dr. Rosoff blamed the present situation on a "totalitarian regime, administrative ineptitude, and an insensitive Board of Trustees." He was optimistic that President McGill would intervene, and ended the interview with "McGill give us the way, we have the will."

Pharmacy Coalition Sues to Halt Closing

*Student, Faculty, Alumni Group Begins
Court Proceedings Against Columbia*

Faculty members, students, and alumni from the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences debated the school's precarious financial situation with the school's administrators and auditors at a stormy meeting yesterday.

The meeting was called by Joseph Kanig, dean of the school, as an "open forum" to discuss the financial difficulties which may force the school to close down in June.

cent of the undergraduates, expressed a "lack of confidence based on administrative mismanagement as well as acts of ill-judgments and injustice in academic matters."

In a related development, the college board of trustees released a statement Tuesday calling the student-faculty petition which asked President McGill to remove Dean Joseph Kanig and appoint an interim administrator in his place, "an emotional reaction against the administration." The board "totally and categorically" rejected "all charges, implications and innuendoes contained therein."

The petition, which was signed by ninety percent of the faculty and graduate students and sixty per cent of the undergraduates, expressed a "lack of confidence based on administrative mismanagement as well as acts of ill-judgments and injustice in academic matters."

The faculty also issued a statement Tuesday denouncing the administration's "bungling, mismanagement and gimmickry" that has brought the school "to its very knees." They supported their charges of "gross administrative mismanagement" by citing the administration's announcement of a seven and one-half per cent rise in faculty salaries which was followed three days later by an announcement that all wages would be frozen.

Pharmacy Students Rally in Opposition To School's Closing

200 Request Columbia To Give Financial Aid

By ERIC RIEDER

Almost 200 students in the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences—more than half the school's student body—picketed at the school Friday to protest the university's refusal to provide funds for the school to continue operation.

Standing in the rain for five hours, the students, along with at least twelve of the school's 36 full-time faculty members, also criticized Dean Joseph Kanig's decision to close the school in June.

John Guerra, one of the student organizers of the protest, said Friday that the action was the first demonstration in the 143-year history of Columbia's pharmacy school. He also stated that the faculty supported the students' actions "100 per cent."

Plans to move the picket line to Low Plaza at 10 a.m., after an hour at the pharmacy school's building at 115 W. 68th St., were abandoned by the demonstrators because of the rain and freezing temperatures. Several students affirmed, however, that the pharmacy students still hoped to arouse university-wide support for the school's plight.

Joseph L. Kanig, dean of the pharmacy school, said last month that the school would be forced to close in June unless it was able to gain outside financial assistance.

President McGill has refused to give the school direct financial aid in light of the university's own financial situation, but has agreed to act as a collateral third party in obtaining a $2 million loan for the school. These funds, according to the loan's terms, must be used to phase out the school in eighteen months. At that time the school's building will be turned over to the bank granting the loan.

Columbia College of Pharmacy May Be Forced to Shut Down

By M. S. HANDLER

The 143-year-old College of Pharmaceutical Sciences, an affiliate of Columbia University, is facing a $500,000 deficit in its $1-million operating budget and may close its doors this June, college officials said yesterday.

Described by its officials as the second oldest college of pharmacy in the United States, it is the only pharmaceutical school in Manhattan and one of only three besides St. John's University and the Brooklyn College of Long Island University in the metropolitan area. Fordham University's College of Pharmacy is being phased out this year.

Last Tuesday, Joseph L. Kanig, dean of the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences and its chief administrative officer, advised the 375 students at an assembly meeting to take the precautions of applying for transfers to other pharmaceutical colleges should the institution fail to raise the money it needs in the coming weeks.

Sigbert Borg, manager for business and finance, said yesterday that if the $500,000 was not raised it was doubtful that the college would remain open after this semester.

Merger Called Unlikely

Mr. Borg said that the possibilities of mergers with the City University, Pace College and the New York Institute of Technology had been explored, but that these institutions were unable to assume an additional financial burden.

He said that appeals to foundations and business concerns had brought meager responses and that it seemed unlikely that substantial help would be forthcoming from such sources. The college has only an educational affiliation with Columbia and thus cannot get financial help there.

The college, situated in a six-story building at 115 West 68th Street, off Broadway, has been one of the principal centers for training pharmacists in the New York area. The college at St. John's has 330 undergraduates and 80 seeking advanced degrees while Brooklyn College of L. I. U. has 107 pharmacy students.

The student body at the College of Pharmaceutical Sciences includes 60 graduate students studying for masters' and doctoral degrees. The course for a bachelor's degree includes five years of academic study, in addition to a six-month internship.

The faculty includes 16 full-time professors and 21 part-time teachers. The college tuition is $1,000 a semester, but about 60 per cent of the students receive some form of financial aid while 80 per cent hold outside jobs.

Some of the students and professors attributed the college's financial problems to administrative mismanagement while others thought the deficit resulted from the acceptance of minority-group students whose tuition costs were largely defrayed by the college.

Latter View Backed

Mr. Borg was inclined to agree, in part, with the latter view. He said the college's small endowment fund had been largely consumed in helping minority-group students.

Many students, embittered by the threat of having their professional training careers cut short this June, said the aid they were now receiving would not continue if they were admitted to another pharmaceutical college. Without such aid, they said, they could not continue their studies.

Dean Kanig, who appears to be the target of much of the bitterness of students and faculty members, could not be reached for comment yesterday. A petition by students and faculty members was sent to Dr. William J. McGill, president of Columbia, requesting the removal of Mr. Kanig and the appointment of an interim administrator.

The petition invoked the agreement of affiliation in which the president of Columbia is responsible for the general supervision and direction of the college.
